

Fact Sheet: Post separation obligations for the Leader and Deputy Leader of the Opposition

Post separation obligations exist to promote integrity, transparency and accountability. They prevent a former Leader or Deputy Leader of the Opposition from taking personal advantage of specific relationships or information they acquired during their time in public office to gain a benefit for themselves or others after their Opposition role.

After you leave your position as a Leader or Deputy Leader of the Opposition (Opposition role), you have 2 key post separation obligations:

1. You must continue to maintain the confidentiality of information you were privy to because of your Opposition role.
2. If you become a Queensland registered lobbyist, you cannot engage in lobbying activities concerning matters you had official dealings with, in your last 2 years as an Opposition staff member, for 2 years after leaving your Opposition role.

This fact sheet tells you what you need to know about these 2 key post separation obligations.

1. Continuing confidentiality obligations

The confidentiality requirements that apply to you in your Opposition role continue to apply after you leave.

Confidential information is information which is not in the public domain and came to your knowledge because of your public office. It does not need to be in writing and there is no time limit to the prohibition on disclosing confidential information.

The Code of Ethical Standards¹ (p. 5) states:

In the course of their duties, Members often receive information which is either confidential or prized (that is, not available to the general public). Members are not to misuse any confidential or prized information, particularly for personal gain.

Unlawful disclosure of confidential information may constitute an offence under the Criminal Code (Chapter 12) or corrupt conduct under the Crime and Corruption Act 2001.

Section 13K of the Ministerial and Other Office Holder Staff Act 2010 applies to the Leader of the Opposition and makes it an offence to unlawfully disclose criminal history information (about an individual) obtained through their Leader of the Opposition role.

2. Restrictions on lobbying

Chapter 4 of the Integrity Act 2009 (Integrity Act) sets out how third party lobbyists (often called professional lobbyists) and lobbying activity is regulated in Queensland.² If you decide to become a Queensland Registered Lobbyist³ upon leaving your Opposition role, there are particular matters you cannot lobby on for 2 years.

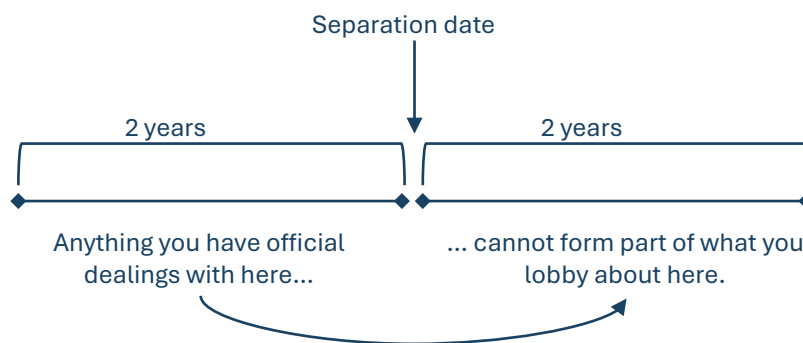

What is the quarantine period and restrictions applying to lobbying activity as defined in the Integrity Act?

As a former Opposition representative,⁴ section 62(2) of the Integrity Act restricts what you may lobby about as a registered lobbyist:

Within 2 years after the person becomes a former representative, the person must not carry out lobbying activity for a third party client if the activity relates to official dealings in which the person engaged in the person's official capacity in the 2 years immediately before the person became a former representative.

This means if you become a registered lobbyist after leaving your Opposition role, you cannot lobby for the next 2 years on any matter you had official dealings with, in the last 2 years in your Opposition role.

These requirements are explained in the diagram below.

Key terms and definitions

To understand how section 62(2) operates and applies to you, you need to know how the key terms highlighted above are defined:

A former representative includes the Leader and the Deputy Leader of the Opposition.⁵

Official dealings is defined in section 41 of the Integrity Act:

official dealings, in relation to a person who is a former representative, means any of the following dealings that the person engaged in as part of the person's ordinary duties on a regular basis—

- (a) government or Opposition business or activities;
- (b) negotiations, briefings, contracts and the making or receipt of representations relating to government or Opposition business or activities.

A third party client is defined in section 41 of the Integrity Act and "means an entity that engages another entity to provide services constituting, or including, a lobbying activity for a commission, payment or other reward, whether pecuniary or otherwise, that is agreed to before the other entity provides the services".

Lobbying activity is defined in section 42 of the Integrity Act and means:

- communicating with a government representative in an effort to influence decision-making of the State government or a local government
- communicating with an Opposition representative in an effort to influence decision-making of the Opposition.

There are certain activities which are excluded from the definition of lobbying activity (e.g. communicating with a committee of the Legislative Assembly or a local government, responding to a call for submissions, or responding to a request for tenders). Refer to section 43 of the Integrity Act for the complete list of excluded activities.

What steps can I take to prevent breaching my obligations?

It is your responsibility to recognise when a potential breach or conflict involving your post separation obligations may arise. You may wish to adopt strategies to help prevent a breach including:

- Compiling a list of the key Opposition business, activities or policy you had involvement with, advised on, or made decisions about, in the last 2 years in your role if you intend to apply to become registered as a lobbyist in Queensland (you must provide a statement of official dealings as part of your application and this statement is published on the Lobbying Register once you are registered).
- Remaining vigilant about any potential issues in any new role.
- Declaring to any prospective employers that you have post separation obligations.
- Erring on the side of caution if there is any uncertainty.
- Seeking out information that may be relevant and/or seeking advice from the Ministerial Services Branch or the Queensland Integrity Commissioner before you leave, or from an independent legal advisor or the Queensland Integrity Commissioner after you have left.⁶

What if I am still in my Opposition role but considering other employment?

There is nothing wrong or inappropriate in considering a new role, having discussions with a prospective employer or considering a job offer made to you. However, engaging with a prospective employer or applying for another role is a personal interest that might give rise, in the mind of a reasonable person informed of the facts, to a conflict of interest. This is when your personal interest in the prospective employment/employer might conflict with the proper performance of your official duties. For example, if you are making a decision in relation to a bill or Opposition policy that could, in the future, materially affect your prospective employer.

If an actual, perceived or potential conflict arises from a prospective employment opportunity or offer, section 3.3.1 of the Opposition Handbook⁷ states that "Leaders must comply with the requirements of the Register of Members' Interests, and the Register of Members' Related Persons Interests, held by the Clerk of the Parliament."⁸ You may also have obligations under the Standing Orders of the Legislative Assembly⁹ and the Parliament of Queensland Act 2001.¹⁰

³ If you are unsure if you need to be registered as a lobbyist please read Fact Sheet - Who needs to be registered to lobby in Queensland. You should also be aware that unregistered lobbying is an offence under section 46 of the Integrity Act.

⁴ Section 60(a) and (b) of the Integrity Act.

⁶ You can continue to obtain advice from the Queensland Integrity Commissioner, about an ethics or integrity issue that arises from a post separation obligation you have, for 2 years after you leave your Opposition role (section 20A of the Integrity Act).
